By International News Service.
BALTIMORE, Nov. 27.—Cardinal O'Donnell today heard the plan of Harry Ford, the Detroit physician, to get the European war soldiers, who are the trachea by Christmas, never to return.

The Cardinal listened attentively to the automobile manufacturer's plan for his peace conference and the subject was discussed at length, but the Cardinal withheld judgment.

A statement was given out after the conference that "Mr. Ford had called to pay his respects, and had outlined his peace plan, which the Cardinal had listened with interest."

The conference lasted for some time, the Cardinal being particularly interested in the project, his formal approval.

"Mr. Ford's plan is quite commendable," said the Cardinal, "and I am sure that it will be of great service to the world."

"I am sure that it will be of great service to the world," said the Cardinal, "and I am sure that it will be of great service to the world."

Baby Bollinger's Fate or Death

Fate Sealed by Ray Photograph

THE story of the hopelessness of Baby Bollinger's life is an incident in itself. This part of Dr. Harry J. Haiselden's story of the new world's famous infant, which was allowed to die rather than live a mental and physical defective, is contained in today's installment of the doctor's book, "BABY BOLLINGER." Read it today. Like the preceding foreword and first chapter, the second chapter of this strange story of real life and death is still more interesting.

BABY BOLLINGER

BY HARRY J. HAISELDEN, M. D.

CHAPTER II.

"Hopeless."

"Now a strange thing happened. Where my feeling as I gazed in the baby's eyes of the child, 'this day from me as I gazed for the first time at the entire naked body of Baby Bollinger. Suddenly I was cool and strong and steady. It looked as though my mind had returned to me. The moment before I had roared back in terror; now I went calmly about my work with me."

I found this baby truly cruelly twisted, cruelly malformed, cruelly lacking in essentials. It was well named, as it was told.

small and pitiful way. At no time during the taking of the five X-ray pictures which recorded its life did it show any signs of mental emotion. It lay there like dead.

It was that flash the first record was written plainly on the silver salts that could be seen in the pictures. The secret of this little life was spread there, so that we could read and study.

Child's First Feeding.
Earlier the child had been fed a little milk poured through the tip with the aid of a medicine dropper. Care had to be exercised in this feeding process, because it was so difficult to get the milk just entered the mouth came out again at the nose. Repeated attempts, however, succeeded in introducing a small quantity of the preparation into the child's stomach.

Mixed with the baby's milk there was a small amount of cornstarch powder, with the aid of which we were able to obtain a record of the child's stomach and its digestive action. Blush in such small quantities, however, was added at the same time it is opaque, and being white it could not pass. This was the first penetration of the X-rays.

In less than five minutes the picture was taken. The baby was wrapped in the blanket and carried it back to the operating room. The child was then placed in the X-ray machine.

There, under a yellow and red light, under the X-ray machine, for some minutes came to me with the child. I was not sure.

I laid it up to the light and had my first glimpse into the interior of the child's stomach. The stomach was strangely distended. It was filled with the milk and cornstarch mixture.

I traced the bluish white spread over the plate in a large round spot. The child was then placed in the X-ray machine.

Digestion had taken place to a certain point, and there it was checked. There was some sort of valve which held back the food and would not permit it to pass through. Here was a blind spot in which the food had gone, but which it could not pass. This was the first penetration of the X-rays.

I thought that it was possible that the natural digestive process had proceeded just this far, and that it would not pass. This was the first penetration of the X-rays.

PEOPLE BATTERED BY THE EFFECTS OF THE WAR

By International News Service.
LONDON, Nov. 27.—Brines from the front lines in the Balkans in great numbers, today's dispatches say, and are described as badly as possible.

Reinforcements leave daily for the front in Serbia. On the Krikkavak-Therapia-Radich line, the Bulgarians have fallen back, leaving a considerable number of dead and wounded.

A Bulgarian attack on the Front position at Valandovo and the Front right wing was repulsed by the British and French troops.

Mr. Kitchener, British Secretary for War, admitted yesterday that the Greek government for all time is led at Greek ports other than Salonica by the British and French troops.

The Currier Daily News of New York announced that the Greek government has been given by the British and French troops at Salonica of the guarantee given to the Greek government relative to freedom of action of their armies.

An official statement issued through the Overseas Agency at Berlin today said that the German-Austro-Hungarian and Bulgarian forces in the Balkans. It further said that the Bulgarians are expected to be located in the grip of battle in the Balkans.

T. R. Jests as He Denies He Will Enlist in War

By International News Service.
NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—President Theodore Roosevelt today, in characteristic manner, set at rest all rumors that he would be called to England to help direct Great Britain's end of the war.

"There is absolutely no truth in the report that I have considered helping the allies in any manner," he said. "I have not the slightest idea of going to Canada, England or France."

This is the first public utterance of the president on a report that he had been persistent in London and was giving credence to this country.

"I am absolutely sure that whatever the report that I have considered helping the allies in any manner," he said. "I have not the slightest idea of going to Canada, England or France."

HOBBS FIGHTS KIDNAPING CHARGE

BANGOR, Me., Nov. 27.—Henry Hilliard Hobbs of Haverhill, Mass., held here for the authorities on a charge growing out of the abduction of his wife on November 11, today regards the whole affair as a "little domestic difficulty," which will soon be smoothed over.

Deputy Sheriff W. R. Shaw of Fortsmith, arrived here early today. He will probably take Hobbs back today as the prisoner says he will go with

"I never loved but one woman, and that one is my wife," says Itobba. "It is only a question of time when we will be living together again. We were happy until we went to live at the mission."

Charles "Burt" in Haverhill, has sued him for alienation of her affections. That suit is pending."

Hobbs, the police say, admits to the abduction of his wife, but says he does not know who the man is who impersonated the policeman for him. He and his brother picked him up on Washington street, Boston.

He took his wife to his cottage in Atkinson, N. H., to get her to sign with her dower right in his farm there. "Her lawyer advised her against it, and I knew I could do nothing unless I got her alone," he says. He denies beating or striking her.

"It was dark when we got to the cottage and she stumbled on the step. She struck the post on the veranda and scratched her face. When she did that she let out a scream, but the stories that I hear are false."

He also denies that he held off the officers at the point of a pistol while he made his escape.

Mrs. Hobbs, who is staying at Portsmouth, was greatly relieved when informed that her husband had been arrested, for since that night she declares that she has lived in constant fear of her life.

I FIND myself, today, dear children, somewhat in a quandary, which means, as Papa will explain to you, that I am in doubt.

I do not know quite where to begin.

The big event of the day, of course, was the departure of Baby Bob for Boston, whence he will go out tomorrow to every home where the Sunday AMERICAN is a visitor. On account of the age of our baby, there was no such public demonstration as witnessed the going away of his mamma and brother and sister, out there were many friends of the family at our house, nevertheless, I MUST say the child went away in style. Rose Red and Snow White went with him, attended by their Fairy Godmother, who will protect the girls from harm, shield them from mortal eye, and bring them back tomorrow in good season for Sunday School.

But there was another event today, and THAT was the strange call I received, early in the forenoon, from a Cat and a Dog.

They had been having a dispute, and I believe they had made a wager. Nevertheless, they approached my place in arm. The Cat wore spectacles and looked perfectly stung in a bouquet tucked under the chin and a great, long traveling cloak. She carried expensive furs for ally, I find it difficult to subscribe to the theory of the Statist, who tell us the Dog is descended from the treacherous Wolf and the sinking Jackal. Today, certainly, the Dog's name is more a grateful servant and loving companion.

"You are both, then, aristocrats," I decided, "and man could not get along without either of you."

"Thank you," said the Cat.

"Then you a thousand times," said the Dog, "and if ever you happen to be in the neighborhood of Mother Hubbard--"

"What?" I exclaimed, "you?"

"Me, indeed," said the "poor" dog of Mother Hubbard.

But YOU don't look like poverty," I said. "YOU don't look like an empty cupboard!"

"Never again!" said the Hubbaud dog, laughing, "never again! My good dame Hubbard received a tip, last February, and bought a ton or two of Bethlehem Steel stock. Now we've got so much money that she has to stuff the sofa pillows with twenty-dollar bills!"

I would have been glad to hear more, but the time approached for the departure of Rose Red and Snow White with Baby Bob. The Cat and the Dog left, promising to stop in again on some rainy Sunday, and stepped around to the barn to bite "lightning," the new pony, into the new cart.

And at a seasonable hour, the children were off for Boston.

The FLEETEST feature of the trip, it seems to me, is the fact that they will be accompanied all the way to Summer street by a delegation of some of our best-known and most popular birds. I noticed in the delegation Jack Snipe, Jenny Wren, Jay Dove, Tom Tit, Bluebird, Bobcat, Parrot, Jill Hooper, Jack Curlew, Jack Nicker, King Harry, Halo Raven, Phil Sparrow and Jacob Starling!

A merry party they made of it, and I would have been glad to go along. I told YOU children, this old house under the Hill is going to be home some, mighty home, for the NEXT ten days.

I know what F.L.D. will spend most of MY time in the moving picture theatre.

Please tell Patience, and Martha and Peter, that Baby Bob is on the way, and that he'll bring his new carriage with him tomorrow to YOUR house.

To be continued Monday.

The dog had a striking look, wore a silk hat and sported heavily rimmed eyeglasses, such as college men wear.

They made a striking looking couple. They turned to the street to look after them. I was real surprised. To be called upon by distinguished people like to be one's self distinguished.

"Mr. Sunshine," said the dog, bowing in air, "we have called upon you because of your reputation as a man of sound judgment, fair mind and good heart."

"I was not aware that such is my reputation," I said, with becoming modesty. "But I thank you for your kind words. What's eating you?"

"Mr. Sunshine," said the Kitty-Cat, "not to waste YOUR valuable time, WE have had a dispute, and we have come to you for a judgment. Which is the nobler animal--the Dog or the Cat? And which is the more indispensable to man?"

"And AM I to understand," I asked, "that my decision in the matter is to be final? That there will be no appeal to the higher courts? That after I have rendered judgment, you will not adjourn to the back yard to fight it out?"

"Mr. Sunshine," said the dog, "I am a gentleman!"

"And I, Mr. Sunshine," said the Kitty-cat, "I hope that I'm a lady!"

"Your pardons, both," I said, "but I want to be sure of my ground. Very well, then, in MY judgment it is fifty-fifty, which I mean six of one and half a dozen of the other. Dogs and cats alike trace their proud histories back to the very beginning of Time. Each is indispensable to man."

"The dog, for example, was domesticated by man long years ago, even before the dawn of history. Person-like she was underestimating a three-legged cow. Or words to that effect.

To be a successful moving picture actress, you have to be born for the job, and be able to register some of the cardinal virtues. And any girl who can do that can get along in any career she chooses.

Characteristic Poses of the Fascinating Anita Stewart, Whose Fame as a Motion Picture Star Has Made Her Name Loved from Coast to Coast

No. 1---The Road to Fame in the Movies

By ANITA STEWART

When Wonderful World "The Godless" and "The Million Dollar Bill" Was the Sensation of the Moving Picture World.

PERHAPS I MAY seem a bit cheeky in a girl as young as I am--I am not yet twenty--to attempt to advise other girls about how they should live their lives, and what they should do and not do.

But just because I am young, just because I am a girl living and working out in the world, I know perhaps better than an older person just how the modern girl should live, just what temptations she has to meet, and just what are her hopes and aspirations, and problems.

Of course, the eternal moralities are always the same from generation to generation. These things were also in our mothers' days, and are also in ours.

EVERYTHING TODAY IS DIFFERENT

It's because everything in the life of a girl of today is so different from what it was in the life of her mother that mothers really cannot take care of their daughters quite as well as they should. How can the mother, who has lived all of her life in the home, surrounded by men she only knows socially, advise her daughter who is out in the world, struggling with men for a living?

How can the mother who only knows the problems of her own young be a guide to her daughter who is living the life of the stage, or the store, or the office, or factory?

It's like a land lubber trying to tell a sailor how to manage a boat in a storm. And the girls know this, and that's why they often don't listen to mother's counsel. I live their life, and that is why I just think that they will perhaps have real heart-to-heart talks with me just as girls do at bedtime with each other when they get on their knees and let down their hair, and get out their cold cream jars, and tell each other the secrets of their souls.

I am sure of it from the letters I write me. "Dear Anita, the letters I want to be a movie star, how shall I go about it?" "Dear Anita, what shall

I do to make myself beautiful like you are?" "Dear Anita Stewart, do you think it happens for a girl to marry or have a career? And so on, and so on, until I am fairly buried in the letters."

Now to answer the first question, first, about how to become a moving picture actress, I think that's the ambition of about nine hundred and ninety-nine per cent of all the women in America, young and old, ugly and pretty.

I don't criticize it. I like to see a girl have ambition, and sun, and what we call get-up-and-get in good Americanese, and to be a moving picture actress is fine, interesting work and to be a moving picture star is--un--un--un--about the best thing ever, I think. Some job believe me.

CERTAIN QUALIFICATIONS ARE NECESSARY

But in order to become a successful moving picture actress one must have certain qualifications. To begin with, there is the question of looks. The woman who aspires to play romantic heroines must not only be beautiful but she must take beautiful photographs. She must have a willowy figure, for nobody can imagine a fat, stumpy girl raising thrills in a man's breast in a real life, although she often does it in real life.

Also her face must be expressive because she has to convey her meaning to the audience without the aid of words. She must have the dramatic instinct as keen, developed that she can make people laugh or cry just by the lift of an eyebrow, or the wringing of her hands, or charm them by the sweetness of her smile.

Then you have to have a constitution of iron, for the work is ceaseless and exhausting. I'm on my feet more hours a day than any other actors in the business, and much of the time I'm in costumes that are a perfect torture to wear, and I have walked more miles in films than any circle-the-globe pedestrian.

And you've got to be Sally-oot-theop in keeping every appointment. For it costs hundreds of dollars an hour for camera men, and the other actors to be kept waiting while some dilatory person hedges to make up the scene strictly casually.

And the girl who goes in for moving pictures has got to leave her size little under feelings at home and not get hurt or mad when the stage director tells her his candid opinion, or how many kinds of an idiot she is, and the way she walks across the stage looks

In Our Wonderful World

In some parts of Mexico the wild hogs, which the natives call jabali--bah-bah--bah--beasts in their natural state are used as watch dogs. If they are caught young and brought up with goats they will go into the hills with the herd and fight coyotes or other wild animals. If they are raised with chickens they will protect them, and round a ranch house at night they are useful. The jabali, however, is a native of the hills. The landers of a hotel in one of the border towns even kept one of the wild hogs as playmates for his baby son.

The jabali is only first cousin, however, to the domestic pig. Swine are divided into two main branches. In one line is the farmer's pig, descended from the wild hog of Europe, and in the other line is the jabali, which is really a peccary. But the jabali is quite "peccary" enough, with its small flexible snout, long mottled bristles and long, sharp tusks.

Many birds during migration are attracted by the powerful glare of lighthouses, and after circling for hours about the light fall exhausted and die. Professor J. P. Thomsen found that if a lighthouse is fitted with proper lights the birds will rest upon them, and few will lose their lives. The light-house at Terschelling, in Holland, has been equipped for the last three years.

At this lighthouse, which stands directly in the path of migration, many birds formerly died every year. Now the deaths do not exceed a hundred throughout the whole season of migration. Perches have recently been fitted to two English lighthouses--The Caxtons, in the English Channel, and St. Catherine's, on the Isle of Wight.
